

ABSTRACT

A method of operating a wireless network, including detecting at least one signal of an external radio source, by a network device of the wireless network, during normal operation of the wireless network, in which while detecting, the network device does not send data to another network device of the wireless network, and changing a communication channel or frequency band, if the at least one signal overlaps with a currently used communication channel or frequency band.